Applicant wrote the book The Race Card, contributed to the book Critical Race Theory, contributed to the book Best African American Essays, and was the co-editor of the Law and Geographies Reader and Local Government Law textbook. His writings have given him a significant degree of notoriety, and in conjunction with notoriety, he has been interviewed about his writings and the general subject of race and politics in the print and electronic media, including an interview on The Colbert Report.

Staff research discovered that Applicant's membership with the California State Bar currently is inactive, although it is eligible to become active.

In the "Activities" section of his supplemental application, Applicant stated that in the late 1990's he served as a Commissioner for the San Francisco Housing Authority. Staff asked Applicant how he obtained that position. Applicant responded that he was nominated for the position by then-Mayor of San Francisco Willie Brown.

When staff reviewed Applicant's application materials with him, staff discovered that Applicant had not included information about his in-laws in the "Family Information" section of his supplemental application.
